

International Affairs and Criminal Justice, BA

This combined major fosters an awareness of crime and justice issues within their international, transnational, and global contexts since the early 20th century. The scope and sequence of international affairs courses provide students with a foundation in topics such as interstate relations (conflict, cooperation, hierarchies); civil society, transnational advocacy networks, global social movements; and state-society relations (democracy, authoritarianism, social justice and inequalities, citizenship). Criminal justice courses provide a foundation for understanding individual and systemic aspects of criminology and criminal justice. Upon graduation, students are equipped with the skills and knowledge needed to work across national cultures in fields that relate to understanding and addressing criminal behavior.
